Overview:

This lesson introduces students to some basics about pirates, including what they wore, where they worked, and why they did what they did. Students will use what they have learned to design realistic pirate costumes.

Connections to the Curriculum:

Geography, world history, apply geography to interpret the past

Time:

Two hours

Materials Required:

- Computer with Internet access
- Drawing materials

Objectives:

Students will

- discuss what they know about pirates;
- view pictures of pirates, and describe their clothing, accessories, and settings;
- read and answer questions about pirates;
- view and discuss pictures of the Whydah discoveries;
- view and write words describing pictures of the Caribbean and North American coast, where pirates practiced during the "golden age;"
- discuss what life might have been like on pirate and trading ships; and

- design realistic pirate costumes, including also a background setting for the pirates.

Geographic Skills:

Acquiring Geographic Information
Organizing Geographic Information
Analyzing Geographic Information

Opening:

Ask students to contribute words describing what they know about pirates.

Show students some pirate pictures from Beej's Pirate Image Archive. What do they notice about the pirates' clothing and accessories and the places where the pictures are set?

Development:

Read to the class, or have them read the Pirates Britannica page and the Pirate Facts for Kids page. Then discuss the answers to these questions as a class, helping them understand what this page is saying:

- Where were the ships going to and from? (from the Caribbean or North America to Europe; have students locate these places on a map)
- What were the ships carrying with them? (goods such as gold, tobacco, and spices)
- Why did the pirates bother the ships? (to steal these goods from them)
- What did their flags look like?

Now that students understand the basics of the "golden age" of piracy, introduce them to the Whydah, explaining that this was a pirate ship that sank in 1717 and has recently been found underwater off the coast of Cape Cod, Massachusetts. Explain that the discovery of the Whydah helped people learn more about what it was like to be a pirate.

Have students look at the pictures of some of the Whydah discoveries at the Whydah Pirate Museum page, and help them understand what these pictures show. What new things can they learn about pirates from looking at these artifacts? Have them list words that describe some of these new things.

Have students go to some or all of these websites to look at pictures of the Caribbean and North Atlantic, where pirates spent a lot of their time between 1500 and 1700. Ask them to write words describing what these places look like. They should comment on the weather and climate and the natural features they see (e.g., beaches).

Closing:

Discuss what life may have been like for people on trading and pirate ships in the golden age of piracy. What types of scenery would people on the ships have seen? What would people on the trading ships be worried about? What would people on the pirate ships have been thinking? What types of things would the pirates have had on board their ships, and how would they have used these things?

Suggested Student Assessment:

Ask students if they have ever dressed up as a pirate for Halloween. Why do they think kids like to dress up as "bad guys?"

Have students return to Beej's Pirate Image Archive to see the pirate pictures again. Ask them to notice the specifics of what the pirates were wearing and the accessories they carried.

Have students design their own pirate costumes on paper using this outline. Have students incorporate some of the things they've learned about pirates, the places pirates worked, and the things they kept on board their ships. They should also draw background scenes, based on the scenes of the Caribbean or North Atlantic and the pirate ships they've seen.

Have students describe their costumes and scenery to one another detailing why they chose the costumes and scenery that they drew.

Extending the Lesson:

Share with the class some of the people who took part in piracy on the Whydah. Then discuss the reasons why people became pirates. What were their goals? Did they all start out as pirates, or did they have more traditional occupations before becoming pirates?
